In the main event, the long-awaited rematch between the first two UFC Featherweight Champions takes place. Originally, Jon Jones was scheduled to fight Carlos Condit for the title, but due to injury he was replaced by Quinton Jackson. BJJ and MMA legend BJ Penn will be fighting at the Lawlor Events Center in the co-main event against off-beat UFC newcomer Chris Leben. The main event of UFC 162 is a rematch of the original title fight of UFC 124 between the current UFC Featherweight champion, Jose Aldo, and his challenger, Erik Koch. Both fighters have recently come out of layoffs, with Jose Aldo barely making it to 155, while Erik was out for a year due to surgery. A controversial decision to give Koch the title win originally and then later change it to a "No Decision" after realizing that it was a controversial decision by the judge is still fresh in the minds of the casual fan. BJ Penn vs Chris Leben Penn will be aiming to keep his UFC record at 16-3 while Leben will hope to get his 19th win in a row to keep in title contention. Both fighters have met before in the now former WEC and both have failed to live up to expectations. During their time on the WEC, Leben was the surging muay thai prospect while Penn was a skilled grappler. But, Leben was surprisingly a much better stand-up fighter and fought on even ground at almost every opportunity, while Penn was arguably a better grappler. Penn had a split decision win over Leben during the Strikeforce Pride openweight grand prix in 2008 while Leben defeated the Hawaiian legend twice in the now defunct WEC. Penn is well known for his counter punching as well as his offensive blitzkrieg style of fighting. Penn is one of the few fighters to have won the UFC and the WEC, winning the UFC light-weight 55cdc1ed1c
